QBS for Public Agencies – Red Book Updated

Online Seminar

Thursday, October 26, 2006

Quality matters. Do you have an upcoming project requiring design services? Contrary to your initial reaction, bidding for professional design services often compromises the architecture and engineering needed for your project. Unlike selecting a professional simply on the basis of cost, using a Qualifications-Based Selection (QBS) system for professional services may help you find the right professional while allowing you to negotiate a level of service and cost appropriate to the project and budget. QBS can lead to lower construction and O&M costs.

The speakers will discuss: Qualifications-based vs. cost-based selection processes; the selection process using QBS; APWA's updated "Red Book" – Selection and Use of Engineers, Architects and Professional Consultants: Guidelines for Public Agencies.
